A CHALLENGING AND CONSTANTLY CHANGING WORLD?

ADDED VALUE FOR THE FUTURE

We can use "design thinking" when we design learning and practices in school, through which we bring added value to our target group.

We can creatively develop our practices to meet the needs of today and the needs of the future, which is the whole mission of education.

Rethink learning through 'design thinking'?

Design thinking is action

TIPS – Use design thinking

- Rethink learning through design thinking: methods, models, learning environments
- Online learning, online learning environments and online collaboration
- Tasks and activities
- School environment and classrooms
- Processes and operations
- Marketing
- Activities with other stakeholders and partners represent teaching and learning (which includes tasks, learning environments, learning models, methods, learning processes, learning materials, excursions etc.

BRANCHES

FRAME YOUR DESIGN CHALLENGES

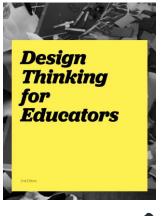

THE ROOTS

are the school and its operational facilities, processes, management, marketing and other partners or stakeholders that support the school

- First introduce yourself:
 - who you are and what school and country you come from
- Share a good experience or success that can also be a tip for someone else
- Think about practical challenges that require development. Are they related to roots or branches?
- Share ideas and thoughts HOW you can tackle these challenges
- At the end WRITE a note for yourself What needs to be develop more
- Later, find the right people and creative tools to help you bring this idea to life
